

BHM Reflection

April V 600

During Black History Month, we learnt about The Windrush Generation. The Windrush Generation is when the Caribbean got invited to Britain after World War II because the British needed jobs to fix up the city.

When the Caribbean arrived, they were not welcomed, not given money by the British or given a home. They left them to find their own homes and jobs, along with their family.

Later on, they all had found a home and a job. Where as their children couldn't make friends because of their skin colour. The Caribbean left as Britain wanted them to come back. It was very odd because the British wanted them but years later, they called them 'illegal immigrants' and deported them away.

An activity was when we had to make the boat that carried thousands of people to Britain. I got the opportunity to work with classmates I didn't usually talk to. I enjoyed making boats and learnt many things too.

I felt very depressed that us Britains called Caribbean's over to help our country but instead, we chose to be racist and proudly tell them to leave this country.

Not long later, we wanted them to come back and
