The Magic Cornet

Marco was feeling sad. Buttercup the cow lived on his farm and it seemed like she was sick. She looked sad and worn. Marco always visited Buttercup in the barn.

Marco sat in the barn with Buttercup and started singing her a song.

"I wish you felt better," Marco said.

The next morning, Marco's sister Bella could tell that Marco was sad and needed cheering up. She had a plan.

"Marco! I need to get some corn for dinner, so you need to come with me to the market!
Go and put your boots on and let's go!"
said Bella.

They went to the market. There were lots of people. They were chatting, shopping and having fun in the sun.

There were carts that were filled with all sorts of food. There were jars of olives and lots of corn.

Bella went to the corner to get food for dinner.
Marco stood next to a cart and waited for his big sister.

Some carts were loaded with trinkets. Marco spotted something in the cart that looked interesting.

"That's a cornet. No one looks at it, so you can keep it," said the market seller.

"It's a little worn out and it's got dust on it, but I'll take it with me, thanks!" said Marco.

Bella came back with a basket of food for dinner. She got jars of olives and lots of corn. "What's that, Marco?" she asked.

"This is my cornet! I got it at the market," said Marco.

"But you cannot play the cornet," said Bella.

"Not yet!" said Marco.

Marco washed the cornet. It no longer looked worn out. It sparkled in the light.

"That looks fantastic, Marco," Dad said as he put the plates out.

"Thanks Dad, I'm going to play it tonight," said Marco.

That night, there was a big storm. Marco sat in his bedroom in the dark, thinking about Buttercup.

The rain was falling hard and there was lightning. "Stay brave out there, Buttercup. I wish that I were with you," Marco said.

Marco picked up the cornet. He breathed in deep and blew hard!

Something magical happened! Stars and light filled Marco's dark bedroom.

A dark bedroom interior is shown, with a window revealing a vast, star-filled night sky. The stars are concentrated in a bright band across the center of the image, suggesting a meteor shower or a very bright celestial event. The room's interior is mostly in shadow, with some faint outlines of furniture and a lamp visible.

"Wow! What was that? Where did those stars come from?" Marco said.

"I know! I'll go to the barn in the farmyard and play for Buttercup! That will make her feel better, I just know it!" Marco said. Marco grabbed the cornet, put on his boots and ran into the storm.

Marco burst into the barn.

"Buttercup! I need you to see this. It is magical!" he said.

Marco blew the cornet hard and the stars flew out again. Buttercup looked up at the amazing sight.

Marco stayed in the barn with Buttercup that night. The storm went away and the stars came out and lit up the night.

Marco came across a big shock the next morning.

A small cow had been born in the barn! Marco was so pleased that Buttercup had not been sick after all, she was just having a baby!

"This is magic," said Marco, as he pet the small cow. "Welcome to the farm!"
